Corvus the crow perched silently on a lamppost, watching the bakery. Below, a man in a bright yellow shirt set a box of donuts on a park bench. Corvus's keen black eyes fixed on one donut with a thick layer of pink frosting. With a silent flutter of deep black wings, Corvus swooped down. He snatched the sweet ring in his powerful beak just as the man reached for it. Corvus flew to the highest branch of an old oak tree and enjoyed his stolen, sugary prize under the warm morning sun.
